JAPAN'S BUSTLING CAPITAL OFFERS OLD TRADITIONS AND NEW SURPRISES

Chef and TV personality Andrew Zimmern has been "around the world 20 times," but he always loves coming back to Tokyo. "Although the traditions never fade, the town is always different," he tells Closer. "It would take three years of going to a new place every night just to touch the 1,000 eateries I want to try." Andrew also appreciates taking a deep dive into Tokyo's rich and singular culture. "I learn the most about myself in places where I don't know the language or my way around," he says. "That means I am growing as a human being. That's the kind of traveling I like best." —Reporting by Fortune Benatar

Street Style

A visit to the youth-oriented Harajuku neighborhood is a must. "It's a 10 for people watching," says Andrew.
